JOHANNES TINCTORIS (c. 1435–1511) is widely acknowledged as one of the most important writers on music of the late Middle Ages and early Renaissance. His twelve Latin treatises demonstrate not only an exceptional technical command of the intellectually demanding musical notation and theory of the time, but also an intimate acquaintance with contemporary compositional practice, derived from a close knowledge of the composers of his day and their music, both in northern Europe, where he ...

It is here that Tinctoris made his famous claim that music had so vastly increased in scope since the 1430s that it seemed to have become a new art-an art that originated in England and was subsequently adopted by French composers. These developments are widely thought to have inaugurated the era of the Renaissance in music.

Johannes Tinctoris and the 'New Art'

Rob C. Wegman 2003-05-01 00:00:00

Two well-known passages from the treatises of Johannes Tinctoris have often been cited in support of the contention that the 1430s marked the beginning of the musical Renaissance. A review of the passages in question indicates that Tinctoris's claims about the recent musical past were so thoroughly shaped by contemporary models of historical interpretation that it is difficult to disentangle hard facts from his ...
