Affectionately, and aptly, known as 'The Cathedral', the size and presence of the W140 S class is something to behold. This S600 LWB from 1996 was, at the time, the most expensive model in the Mercedes range and is regarded as the last of the 'overengineered' cars they produced, packed with technology and comfort innovations.

The Mercedes-Benz S-Class may have reached its technical peak in 1991 with the W140 generation. Here we had a car that introduced several new innovations when launched, such as double-glazed side glass and self-closing doors. Of course, the technology went further than that, with the boffins at Mercedes-Benz (and more correctly, Bosch) also coming up with Electronic Brakeforce Distribution - a ...
