The online version of the weekly newspaper "Our City" contains current and back issues of the newspaper, classified ads, dining guide, and area information.

"Fascinated by the recent creation of the 800-mile Oregon Desert Trail, an initiative by the conservation organization Oregon Natural Desert Association to link together and bring attention to eastern Oregon's lesser known but visually spectacular high desert and canyonlands, author Ellen Waterston seeks to write a book that both brings the landscape to the fore and also situates it in terms of the people who live there and care about the land, as well as the conflicts over land that are never far from the surface, such as those that erupted at the Malheur Wildlife Refuge in January 2016. This is a book for general readers seeking a critical look at the way our conversations about land shape a place; it's also a book that evokes the people and natural world of eastern Oregon"--

Abstract.

One woman's attempt to make something of herself already. During nap time. The story begins: Me: Mother, wife and writer watching forty climb the front steps like a peddler pushing time, and me with nowhere to hide. The writer part used to come first, the forty used to be thirty, and marriage and motherhood were abstract activities I thought I'd try someday. Ah, growing up. If only it was the thrill promised when we were six. All I want in the whole wide world besides being a good mother to my two tiny daughters is to be an author. But writing is hard. And the publishing industry is a beast. And I am terrified of failure. And most of my days are spent trapped under a pile of plastic princesses or scraping peanut butter off of the wall. Will I pull this author thing off? Or will I ditch writing, adopt a Xanax habit, abandon my own identity and live the rest of my life vicariously through my children? Hmm, let's find out.

A tiny wild rose bud gently opens her petals to the roaring river that rushes beneath her vines. She soon befriends a little bird and finds herself fully bloomed, longing for adventure and a glimpse into what (or who) may be found downriver!

A singer/songwriter, storyteller, and live music enthusiast opens up about his past, his songs, local music bands, and the balancing act of being a musician while building a career and starting a family. This story will take you on a journey into local music performing in Central Oregon. student - and then to adulthood when he joined the military and then later became a television producer. He will tell you how I met his wife, who is a real music fan, and how she introduced him to indie rock which inspired him to transition his creative efforts to perform music of his own on local stages. You'll hear the stories, lessons and successes of his time performing as a local musician, while he developed my career and started his family.
